“... faith apart from works is dead.” (Jam. 2.26)

Martin Luther is said to have published his 95 Theses on 31 October 1517. In the first two theses, He claimed that faith alone (with God's grace, and without the need for any good work) is sufficient for anyone to be saved. His claim which formed the bedrock of his theology that contributed to the Reformation appears to have been informed by a superficial reading of St Paul. In Romans 3.20, St Paul says that no one can be justified in God's sight by works of the law. “For we hold”, he goes on, “that a person is justified by faith apart from works of law.” (Rom. 3.28) He invokes the example of Abraham whose faith was reckoned as righteousness (Rom. 4.3; cf. Gen. 15.6), and concludes that the faith of anyone who does no work of law but trusts in the God who justifies the ungodly is also reckoned as righteousness (Rom.4.5). But St Paul is here talking about the irrelevance of Jewish cultural practices (not about the necessity of good works) for personal salvation. Salvation is not something we can claim any credit for, since it is beyond what we can achieve by the sheer exercise of our faculties. Rather, it is something we receive purely as a gift from God, but which, to be realised in each person, requires the person's response in the form of full cooperation with grace expressed through good works. That is, the faith which justifies is in its very nature an active and living faith. It necessarily involves and expresses itself in good work that in turn completes (Jam. 2.22) and gives it life, else it is like a fossil that may have a paleontological value but, for practical purposes, is utterly useless (cf. Jam. 2.17). By His own conduct and teaching, Our Lord is clear about the kind of faith that justifies and saves, namely, faith that is interwoven with charity: He says: I was hungry and you gave me to eat, thirsty and you gave me a drink, naked and you clothed me, sick or in prison and you visited me . . . (Mt 25.43-46). Without good works such as these, personal salvation is utterly impossible.
